

The Gull-billed Tern in Western Australia.—The first observation of the Gull-billed Tern (Gelochelidon nilotica) in South-western Australia was that of V. N. Serventy (W.A. Nat., 5: 23) at Morawa in August 1953. Others from Moora (W.A. Nat., 5: 143), Cooloongup Lake (Emu, 57: 353), and Lake Grace (Emu, 58: 19) rapidly followed.

On October 22, 1957, B. V. Teague and I collected a specimen at Hutt Lagoon, some 45 miles north of Geraldton. The specimen was a male in full nuptial plumage, the forehead, crown and nape being black; legs, black; iris, brown; and gonads enlarged. Dimensions were: culmen, from skull, 50 mm.; exposed culmen, 47 mm.; culmen from anterior point of nostril, 33 mm.; wing, 348 mm.; tail to tip of longest feather, 144 mm.; tail to middle of fork, 92 mm.; tarsus, 46.5 mm. Altogether some forty nuptial-plumaged Gull-billed Terns were seen feeding over the salt lake.

On November 9, 1957, I saw an eclipse-plumaged Gull-billed Tern near the Murray River estuary, Peel Inlet. The black on the head was confined to a small area around the eyes and the diagnostic black bill arrested attention as the individual flew overhead.

Because of the apparent rarity of the species in Western Australia generally (Serventy and Whittell, Birds of Western Australia, 1951), it is opportune to record an observation made in the North-West. From January 10 to 18, 1959, I frequently observed the species along the Harding River, near Roebourne. Both nuptial- and eclipse-plumaged terns, the latter predominating, were feeding on the fresh-water fish trapped in the river, which, at the time, consisted of a series of large pools.

OBITUARY

B. V. TEAGUE

Brian Vincent Teague was born at Dwellingup on September 5, 1927, and was accidentally killed whilst on duty with the Railway Department at Fremantle on December 19, 1957. His untimely death cut short what had every prospect of being a very promising career in natural history.

Brian, with his younger brother Malcolm (also deceased) and his sister Margaret, were educated entirely through the Correspondence Classes of the Education Department. All three were such sound pupils that they were offered scholarships, though none of the three took these up. Brian in particular showed a keen aptitude for drawing and sketching and was especially good with bird subjects. Miss Olive Seymour, secretary of the Gould League of Birdlovers and a member of the Correspondence Classes staff, encouraged him to prepare a number of bird sketches when he was in the upper primary grades and these were mounted for display, as "Birds of the Williams District," forming part of the Gould League exhibitions in the early Wild Life Shows at the Perth Town Hall.

This association with the Gould League led to his joining in turn
